

Government Relations and Legislative Activities Research Guide

NAR Archives Research Guide

The National Association of REALTORS® Archives produces Research Guides with the goal of helping members, scholars, and staff locate information held in the Archives. Each Guide covers one series of records, providing historical background and context on how the materials relate to NAR as a whole. In addition, the Guides contain content lists, brief notes about the materials, and box locations within the Archives. Researchers can use these Guides to gain a better understanding of the materials and quickly decide which records may be most relevant to their research.

Government Relations and Legislative Activities Series B13

The National Association of REALTORS® has long been a political player in Washington, D.C. Since its inception in 1908, NAR has been involved in discussions about housing, taxation, mortgage finance, and other policy issues. During World War I, NAR established its reputation in Washington through its help in the war property effort. REALTORS® worked to secure housing for defense workers, acquired land for war production facilities, and appraised properties for federal acquisition. This work during WWI solidified NAR's role as a partner with the federal government in real estate matters.

During the Great Depression, NAR played a major role in shaping the ways in which the country's housing markets were regulated and housing was produced. NAR advocated for the creation of the Federal Home Loan Bank System, the Federal Housing Administration, the U.S. Housing Authority, and other federal housing and lending programs. Throughout the 1920s, 1930s, and into the start of WWII, NAR worked closely with the federal government to shape the way housing legislation was both created and enacted. During this time the association did not have a formal advocacy program or department; all advocacy efforts were conducted by Executive Vice President Herbert U. Nelson and the association's elected leadership.

NAR's formal legislative efforts began in 1942 with the creation of the REALTORS® Washington Committee (RWC). During WWII, NAR acted in a similar capacity to WWI, helping the federal government with the war property effort. The RWC formalized these wartime efforts, and then outlasted the war as it took on a greater role in representing the association's interests in Washington. In 1950, the RWC became the “permanent legislative arm of the Association”¹ The Committee sought “to advance national policies approved by the Board of Directors of NAREB by working with Congress and the agencies of the Federal Government...to study, formulate, and recommend policies and legislation to the Board of Directors or to the Executive Committee...to develop information for the use of public bodies and REALTORS® which may be helpful to the furtherance of its objectives.”² In 1973, the RWC became the REALTORS® Legislative Committee, and the REALTORS® Political Action Committee (RPAC) became the major political fundraising arm of NAR. (see the RPAC Research Guide for more history and information at RPAC).

From the early 1970s onward, NAR sought to strengthen its reputation in Washington. NAR leaders provided congressional testimonies; NAR issued “Congressional Report Cards” to help members vote for candidates who supported NAR-backed legislative agendas at the federal level; and NAR’s various committees worked to analyze priority real estate issues and then lobby for legislation that supported American homeownership.

NAR’s success in Washington was immense, but NAR’s lobbying efforts also found success at the grassroots level in state/local municipalities. Through the creation of the Issues Mobilization Program in the 1970s, NAR focused on public policy issues at the state or local level and the impact those would have nationally. The grassroots campaigns, opportunity races, and “Calls-to-Action,” served to advance homeownership at every level of the government. Today, the REALTOR® Party “leverages the grassroots network of 1.4 million REALTORS® to fight for homeownership, real estate investment, strong communities, and the free enterprise system.”³

The Government Relations and Legislative Activities series contains materials related to NAR’s legislative efforts at all levels. The majority of the materials are from the post-WWII era, but there are some materials from the 1920s and 1930s that discuss the formation of federal lending practices and bodies. Beginning with the Government Affairs Department and the REALTORS® Washington Committee, the materials then diverge into two sub-series, one with materials about federal legislative activities and the other with materials about state/local legislative activities. The final sub-series contains materials specifically related to NAR’s efforts with elections and member political involvement.

The RPAC materials are not discussed in this research guide, but are fully described in the REALTORS® Political Action Committee Research Guide.

B13:02 REALTORS® Washington Committee

The REALTORS® Washington Committee began in 1942 to assist with the war effort (war housing for war workers, against high density subsidized rent-controlled housing, lobbying to put industrial REALTORS® to work to use industrial properties for the war effort, furnished personnel to the government to rand real estate work for Army, Navy, WPB, OBA, and housing agencies) and to protect the interests of REALTORS®. It was “the spearhead of the National Association’s contribution to the war program”⁵

In 1950, the RWC became the “permanent legislative arm of the Association.”⁶ The Committee sought “to advance national policies approved by the Board of Directors of NAREB by working with Congress and the agencies of the Federal Government...to study, formulate, and recommend policies and legislation to the Board of Directors or to the Executive Committee...to develop information for the use of public bodies and REALTORS® which may be helpful to the furtherance of its objectives.”⁷ In 1973, the REALTORS® Washington Committee became the REALTORS® Legislative Committee.
